Abstract

The concept of truth is one of the central themes in both philosophy and theology. Epistemology and theology have advanced in the pursuit of truth with different methods and distinct objectives. Consequently, their presentations of truth also different. This paper attempts to analyze the nature and purpose of truth in the light of epistemology and theology. It discusses the methods and sources employed by philosophy and religion in justifying truth. On this discussion, the paper identifies possible areas of conflict between the two conceptions and proposes constructive solutions for resolving them. The aim of this paper is to demonstrate, through comparative analysis, that although epistemological and theological truths are distinct, they can complement each other and can play a vital role in flourishing human life.
